Policies/Due Diligence Processes in Relation to Modern Slavery

In keeping with its wider commitment to act ethically and with integrity in all its business activities and relationships, ZML maintains policies and procedures, including due diligence processes, which assist in the identification, prevention, and mitigation of risks in relation to Modern Slavery, including:

- Anti-bribery and corruption policy – This sets out ZML’s approach to prevent and detect bribery and corruption, addressing practices which may be indicators of Modern Slavery risks.
- Health, safety, security, and environmental policy.

employment conditions, and child labour/protection arrangements prohibiting the employment of children).

- Personnel – ZML does not use forced or compulsory labour. ZML's employees are recruited and provided with working conditions that comply with all applicable laws and regulations. Guidelines cover personnel conduct, including any form of discrimination, harassment, abusive conduct, and unlawful activity.
- Recruitment procedures – These include arrangements for checking, validating licenses/right to work permits, and identity.
- Security procedures – Undertaking specialist checks in high-risk areas to prevent the stowing away of persons on board vessels and arrangements for returning any identified individuals into the care of the appropriate competent authority.
- Supplier Business Ethical Trading Policy.
- Whistle-blowing policy – To deal with any concerns in respect of internal or external activity, including in relation to the management of ZML's suppliers or impacts on ZML's supply chain, with safeguards to protect any whistle-blowers.

ZML's policies and procedures (including those related to Modern Slavery) are kept under continuous review and these are updated periodically as appropriate.

Risk Assessment & Management

ZML expects all personnel and counterparties in its supply chain to comply with all applicable laws and regulations and to maintain high ethical standards. ZML will carefully monitor such matters and reserves the right to cease trading with such counterparts and take any other action as appropriate.

ZML has assessed the specific Modern Slavery risks within the maritime sector including, without limitation:

- human trafficking through the inadvertent transport of persons stowed away on-board vessels
- heightened risks in dealing with companies based in jurisdictions which do not have equivalent standards to the UK

ZML's policies and procedures are designed to address these risks and are communicated to all relevant staff, including those on-board our managed vessels.

ZML continues to monitor Modern Slavery risks in its business activities, and to adapt its procedures, activities, and priorities as appropriate in line with its commitment to responsible business practices and national/international guidelines.

Key Performance Indicators to Measure Effectiveness of Steps Taken

ZML's policies and procedures facilitate the identification of Modern Slavery risks within its business activities, either through the raising of any potential violations of law or internal arrangements by personnel or through oversight arrangements (including management information and its internal audit program), enabling management to actively consider and to enhance existing arrangements to further mitigate such risks.

ZML is committed to improving its practices to combat Modern Slavery, continuing to evolve the way in which it identifies and mitigates Modern Slavery risks within its business activities, and to measure the effectiveness of its policies and procedures, ensuring they remain appropriate in consideration of the identified risk and the size and operations of the company.

ZML monitors industry and regulatory developments pertaining to modern slavery considerations and during this period has continued to review and update its relevant policies and procedures, enhancing its practices as appropriate.
